Cobham to Udama: Take Your Case to Court, Not Politics

The Cross River State Commissioner for Information, Pastor Ekpenyong Cobham, has told critics of the Bassey Otu administration, including Denis Udama, to present evidence in court instead of engaging in what he called politically motivated attacks.

Cobham spoke in Calabar during an impromptu media briefing convened to address what he described as growing misinformation around recent developments in the state.

The briefing turned confrontational when questions were raised on a petition reportedly filed against Udama.

Cobham said the Cross River government was not behind the petition. He argued that if it were a government action, it would have emanated from the Office of the Secretary to the State Government or the Attorney General.

"The individuals who initiated the petition acted in their personal capacities, even though they used their official designations for identification," he said.

According to him, the matter is already before the courts and should be allowed to run its course without politicization.

"This is not a subject of politics. It is a criminal issue. It is an act of absolute insolence," Cobham said.

He challenged anyone seeking to defend Udama to do so in court, and urged Udama to make public any information that could substantiate his allegations.

With Cross River approaching another election cycle, the Commissioner said citizens deserve credible information, not unsubstantiated claims.

He also criticized opposition figures and former public officials for attacking the Otu administration without accounting for their own records in office.

"Political engagement should be centred on policies, programmes, development indices and verifiable achievements, not personal attacks," he said.

Cobham defended Governor Otu's frequent engagements outside the state, saying effective governance requires constant interface with federal institutions to attract projects and interventions.

He challenged opposition politicians to a public debate on the administration's performance.

"Let them call once for a debate. Let them try and raise the bar," he said.

The Commissioner also highlighted the state's push for recognition as an oil-producing state as a key issue that should dominate public discourse.

Cobham, who said he previously operated from the opposition, noted that criticism must be constructive and evidence-based.

He urged critics to "educate themselves to the strata" at which the administration is operating, and called for political discourse to rise above "rudimentary arguments."

Cobham recently assumed office and has pledged a media-friendly approach, with regular engagements to ensure accurate communication of government activities.

The exchange marks one of the administration's strongest responses yet to its critics as political activities begin to build up ahead of the 2027 elections.

NUJ Calls for return of Ministerial Press Briefings in C'River

The Nigeria Union of Journalists, NUJ, Cross River State Council has appealed to the state government to reinstate quarterly ministerial press briefings, saying citizens are not being adequately informed about government policies, programmes and projects.

The call was made by the NUJ Chairman, Comrade Archibong Bassey, on Thursday during a familiarization visit by the Commissioner for Information, Pastor Ekpenyong Cobham, to the NUJ Secretariat in Calabar.

Bassey said the absence of regular ministerial briefings has created an information gap, despite the many activities of the Senator Bassey Otu administration.

"Before now, we used to have ministerial press briefings. By that, MDAs have the opportunity to explain. By that, we inform Cross Riverians. It has not been for a long time,” she said.

“Just a few days ago, we had the Commissioner for Youth and Sports come on a session with us. There is so much going on, but people don’t seem to be informed. We are not highlighting policies, programs, and projects of His Excellency the way they should be highlighted,” the Chairman stated.

He urged the new Commissioner to push for the return of the briefings, preferably on a quarterly basis, to improve transparency and public awareness.

“Please, sir, it is an appeal that we try to bring it back. Maybe quarterly ministerial press briefings. It will go a long way to promote the activities of His Excellency,” Bassey appealed.

In his response, Pastor Cobham assured the union of a media-friendly government and a commitment to regular information dissemination.

Drawing from his experience as former Commissioner for Transport, he said he kept the media abreast of activities and would replicate same in his new role.

“When I was Commissioner for Transport, I kept the media abreast. I kept the press abreast. Going forward, we are going to have a close working partnership. In this season of active engagement, there will be dissemination,” he said.

The Commissioner also declared that the doors of the Ministry of Information would remain open to journalists and that a proper media conference would soon be convened to set the agenda for collaboration.

“The journalist is as important as any other public office holder. Together, we will fight the challenges of Cross River State and we’ll enjoy the benefits of Cross River State,” Cobham said.

state government, stressing that the appropriate government offices would have handled the matter if it had originated from the administration.

Cobham stated this during an impromptu engagement with journalists in Calabar while responding to questions on Odama's arrest and prosecution.

He said, "The state government and the office of the Executive Governor should be alienated from this process because this process never originated from there."

According to the commissioner, the petition was initiated by the individuals involved in their personal capacities following comments allegedly made by Odama against officials of the state government.

He said the matter had now entered the legal process and should be allowed to run its course rather than being politicised.

Cobham said the key issue was whether Odama's alleged actions violated existing laws regulating the social media space and whether the processes leading to his prosecution complied with the law.

He urged lawyers and others seeking to defend Odama to do so through the courts, stressing that the matter should not be determined through political arguments or media commentary.

"The due process of the law is taking its course," he said.

The commissioner also challenged Odama to make public any information he might have concerning allegations against the state government, particularly claims that some government officials were being shielded from redeployment because they allegedly possessed compromising information.

He said if Odama had such information, he should submit it to the appropriate authorities rather than circulate it on social media.

Turning to the role of the media, Cobham urged journalists to go beyond official statements and independently verify claims before publication.

He said the state government remained committed to constructive engagement with journalists and would provide information on its policies, programmes and projects to help curb misinformation.

As part of the effort, Cobham disclosed that the government planned to conduct a project-by-project assessment to establish the actual status of its projects.

According to him, the exercise would give journalists access to verified information and enable them to report authoritatively on the administration's achievements.

He said the initiative was also aimed at strengthening the relationship between the government and the media and ensuring that members of the public received accurate information.

Cobham, however, returned to the Odama case, maintaining that it should not be politicised and urging all stakeholders to allow the court to determine the matter in accordance with the law.

Special Duties Commissioner Charges Abuja Liaison Office Staff on Efficiency, Discipline

By Uchino Amatey

The newly appointed Commissioner for Special Duties and Intergovernmental Relations, Cross River State, Hon. Dodeye Ikpi Arikpo, has charged staff of the Cross River State Liaison Office, Abuja, to remain committed to their responsibilities and uphold the standards required to effectively project the image and interests of the state.

Arikpo gave the charge on Monday during a familiarisation visit to the Liaison Office in Asokoro, Abuja, as part of efforts to acquaint himself with the operations of the office and interact with its personnel.

The Commissioner urged staff to cooperate with him and the leadership of the Liaison Office in advancing the People First agenda of Governor Bassey Edet Otu and contributing to the growth and development of Cross River State.

He stressed that, as representatives of the state in the nation's capital, personnel of the office must exemplify professionalism, excellence and discipline, warning that poor attitude to work would not be tolerated.

Arikpo also emphasised the importance of appropriate dressing and professional appearance, particularly among drivers and protocol officers, directing them to appear in suits and ties while on official duties. He pledged to provide white shirts for drivers to facilitate compliance with the directive.

The Commissioner encouraged staff to see their respective responsibilities as an integral part of the state's administrative machinery, stressing that efficiency, discipline and dedication were essential to the effective functioning of the Liaison Office.

In her opening remarks, the Special Adviser, Cross River State Liaison Office, Abuja, Mrs. Sarah Archibong, congratulated Arikpo on his appointment, describing him as a "round peg in a round hole."

Archibong assured the Commissioner of the staff's loyalty, cooperation and commitment to supporting his mandate and ensuring the effective discharge of the office's responsibilities.

Speaking during the interaction, the Head of Accounts, Mrs. Ekora Usani, and the Head of Registry, Mrs. Kuwo Ifere, highlighted some of the concerns affecting personnel of the office.

Usani appealed for greater integration of the Liaison Office into state government programmes and initiatives, noting that personnel sometimes felt excluded from incentives and other benefits available to staff of ministries, departments and agencies in Calabar.

Ifere, on her part, called for improved staff welfare packages to cushion the effects of prevailing economic realities and enhance the morale and productivity of personnel.

Otu Slashes Inter-City Transport Tickets, Cuts Charges by Over 40% in Cross River

By Afiong Ndem

Cross River State Governor, Senator Bassey Edet Otu, has approved a significant reduction in transport tickets payable by inter-city drivers across the state, in a move aimed at easing operating costs and creating a more conducive environment for transport operators.

Under the new arrangement, outbound inter-city drivers will now pay ₦750, down from the previous ₦1,350, representing a reduction of ₦600, while drivers operating from private parks will pay ₦450, compared with the former ₦750.

The reduction, contained in a press release signed by the Governor's Chief Press Secretary, Linus Obogo, followed extensive consultations with stakeholders in the transport sector and reflects the administration's response to concerns affecting the daily operations and livelihoods of transport operators.

The new charges are expected to reduce the financial burden on transport operators while contributing to a more efficient transportation system across the state.

The initiative is also expected to facilitate the movement of people and goods, strengthen linkages between communities and markets, and support commercial activities across Cross River.

With its agricultural resources, tourism assets and growing economic opportunities, the state relies significantly on an efficient transportation network to connect communities, businesses and investment destinations.

Affordable transportation is particularly important to the movement of agricultural produce and other resources from rural communities to urban markets, while also enabling people to access economic opportunities and essential services across the state.

The Governor's approval underscores his administration's wider commitment to policies that promote economic activity, improve the business environment and support the welfare of transport operators and other citizens.

The reduction also reinforces the administration's approach of engaging relevant stakeholders in developing practical responses to economic pressures affecting businesses and livelihoods.

The state government reiterated its determination to sustain consultations with stakeholders and pursue policies that reduce unnecessary burdens on businesses while promoting sustainable livelihoods and inclusive economic development.

The latest intervention is expected to provide relief for transport operators and further strengthen the transportation sector as a critical component of Cross River's economic development.

SECTORIAL STRIDES is a special analytical column that chronicles and evaluates the achievements of the administration of Governor Bassey Edet Otu under the People First Agenda. Written by Kingsley Agim, the column takes readers beyond headlines and project commissioning ceremonies to examine the impact of government policies, programmes, and interventions across key sectors of the state's economy and public service.

Each edition will spotlight a specific sector, providing a fact-based assessment of milestones recorded by ministries, departments, and agencies, while highlighting how these achievements are improving the lives of Cross Riverians and advancing the state's development objectives.

From infrastructure and healthcare to education, agriculture, tourism, economic development, and social welfare, etc, Sectorial Strides offers a comprehensive account of the administration's journey, achievements, and legacy, one sector at a time.

The inaugural edition focuses on the Infrastructure Cluster, examining the transformative investments in roads, power, water resources, transportation, aviation, and border community development that are helping to reshape Cross River State's socio-economic landscape.

Gov. Otu: Repositioning Cross River's Information Sector for Transparency, Digital Governance, Global Visibility

Kingsley Agim, anipr

Information is the lifeblood of governance. It shapes public perception, inspires confidence, preserves history and connects government with the governed. Recognising this reality, Governor Bassey

Edet Otu made the revitalisation of Cross River State's information ecosystem a strategic component of his People First Agenda, transforming what had long been regarded as a routine government communication apparatus into a dynamic instrument for transparency, citizen engagement and institutional efficiency.

Three years into the administration, the information sector has emerged as one of the state's most improved sectors, recording remarkable progress in digital transformation, public communication, media relations, broadcasting, institutional strengthening and archival documentation. The reforms implemented between 2023 and 2026 have not only modernised government information management but have also significantly enhanced Cross River

State's visibility on the national and international stage.

Prior to 2023, many of the structures responsible for government information management had suffered years of neglect. Critical communication infrastructure was outdated, public engagement had diminished, digital platforms were inactive, and the Ministry of Information operated with severe manpower and technological limitations.

Governor Otu's administration responded with deliberate investments aimed at rebuilding the Ministry into a modern public communication institution capable of meeting the demands of contemporary governance.

For the first time in well over a decade, the Ministry underwent comprehensive institutional revitalisation. Modern ICT equipment was procured, digital workflows introduced, and office operations significantly improved through technology-driven systems. Equally significant was the recruitment of 20 new personnel (information officers), ending a manpower deficit that had persisted for more than 13 years and injecting fresh capacity into government information management.

These reforms improved operational efficiency while laying the foundation for a more responsive and professional information service.

Perhaps one of the administration's most visible achievements has been the deliberate repositioning of Cross River State within the national media landscape.

Under Governor Otu, the Commissioner for Information maintained consistent appearances on leading national television networks including Channels Television, AIT, ARISE News, TVC, NTA and other major platforms. These engagements provided opportunities to explain government policies, address public concerns, counter misinformation and showcase development initiatives across multiple sectors.

According to official records, Cross River's national media visibility rose dramatically from approximately 28 percent in 2022 to about 78 percent by 2025, representing one of the most significant improvements in government media presence in recent years.

Beyond publicity, the initiative strengthened transparency, improved policy communication and restored public confidence in government information.

One of the landmark achievements of the administration was the revival of the Ministry of Information's official website, www.moi.cr.gov.ng, which had remained inactive since 2015.

The restoration of the website was accompanied by the establishment of official social media platforms on Facebook, Instagram and X (formerly Twitter), creating an integrated digital communication ecosystem capable of reaching citizens both within Nigeria and across the diaspora.

These platforms now provide timely updates on government activities, policy decisions, public announcements and developmental projects, ensuring that citizens receive information directly from official sources.

Government estimates indicate that the digital platforms currently account for approximately 70 percent of the Ministry's publicity reach, with a target of increasing coverage to 95 percent by 2027 through full integration with the state's official digital platforms.

The daily publication and electronic distribution of government news bulletins to Ministries, Departments and Agencies have further strengthened real-time information dissemination and inter-agency communication.

One of the less publicised but highly significant reforms has been the restoration of official government documentation.

For years, several statutory government publications had suffered irregular production, affecting record keeping and legal documentation.

The Otu administration reversed this trend through the commercial printing and publication of Government Gazettes, White Papers, Tender Journals and all enacted state laws, including the 2025 Appropriation Law.

These publications have strengthened institutional memory, improved legal documentation, enhanced transparency and preserved important government decisions for future generations.

Similarly, the resumption and sustained production of official government bulletins since January 2023 has restored a vital information channel that had previously become inactive.

Another landmark achievement has been the revival of Giant Strides Magazine, the Ministry's flagship publication showcasing government projects, programmes and development initiatives.

The magazine, which had not been published since July 2017, resumed publication in October 2023 and has remained consistent.

Within three years, seven editions have been completed, and more than 13,000 copies have been distributed across Nigeria.

Beyond public enlightenment, the publication now serves as an enduring documentary record of the Otu administration's developmental journey and a valuable archival resource for future generations.

Governor Otu's administration also demonstrated an appreciation for strategic storytelling as a tool for investment promotion and image building.

The production and nationwide broadcast of the documentary "Governor Otu @2" represented a significant milestone in government communication.

Aired on Channels Television, AIT, ARISE News, TVC, NTA and other national networks between May and June 2025, the documentary highlighted achievements across multiple sectors, projecting Cross River State to a nationwide audience and strengthening investor confidence in the state's development agenda.

Combined with regular press briefings and sustained media engagements, these initiatives have ensured that government activities remain accessible, verifiable and visible.

While embracing digital communication, the administration equally recognised the importance of grassroots engagement.

Through sustained mass mobilisation campaigns, coordinated press releases, Information Officers deployed across Ministries, Departments and Agencies, and the Village Square Broadcast Programme, government information reached communities that traditionally had limited access to digital media.

The Village Square initiative particularly strengthened communication with traditional institutions, promoted indigenous values and ensured that government policies were explained in culturally relevant ways.

This combination of digital innovation and community engagement has significantly expanded the reach of government communication across urban and rural communities alike.

CRBC's Digital Revolution

If the Ministry of Information experienced institutional renewal, the Cross River Broadcasting Corporation underwent a complete technological transformation.

Over the last three years, CRBC evolved from a conventional broadcasting station into a modern multimedia organisation.

The Corporation introduced a fully paperless digital newsroom, enabling real-time news production and significantly improving operational efficiency.

To guarantee uninterrupted broadcasting despite Nigeria's persistent power challenges, four television and radio studios were equipped with inverter systems, virtually eliminating on-air interruptions caused by electricity outages.

Additional investments included the installation of a new 20/2-kilowatt radio transmitter, a 13KVA electrical substation, comprehensive remodelling of radio studios, reception areas, conference facilities and newsroom infrastructure, as well as the acquisition of a new operational vehicle.

These improvements have substantially enhanced staff productivity and broadcast quality.

Perhaps the most transformative achievement at CRBC has been the expansion of its audience beyond traditional terrestrial broadcasting.

Television services were migrated to satellite and Free-to-Air platforms, while Radio Garden integration enabled global online radio streaming.

The launch of the Naija TV mobile application, migration to the GOtv platform and government-supported NIGOSAT carriage services further expanded access to Cross River programming.

Today, CRBC reaches audiences across more than ten local government areas while simultaneously serving viewers and listeners across Nigeria and the international diaspora.

For the first time, Cross River's stories are being told simultaneously to local communities and global audiences.

Understanding the changing media landscape, has CRBC established a modern podcast studio through collaboration with diaspora media partners in the United States.

This initiative has opened new opportunities for digital content production while positioning the Corporation to compete within today's evolving multimedia environment.

Equally important was the expansion of indigenous language programming following the acquisition of National Broadcasting Commission thematic language licences.

Combined with tourism-focused programmes, these initiatives have strengthened cultural preservation while promoting Cross River's rich heritage to wider audiences.

Strengthening Institutional Capacity

Beyond infrastructure and technology, the administration has invested heavily in institutional development.

Participation in national fora of Information Commissioners under the Progressive Governors' Forum has enhanced intergovernmental collaboration while improving policy coordination and professional networking.

The remarkable transformation recorded in the information sector has also attracted national recognition for the Honourable Commissioner for Information, Dr. Erasmus Ekpang, whose leadership has earned him several prestigious media and public communication awards from reputable professional bodies and organizations across the country. In further affirmation of Cross River State's growing influence in public communication, the Commissioner was unanimously elected Secretary of the Forum of Commissioners for Information in All Progressives Congress (APC)-governed states, a development widely regarded as a testament to the administration's innovative communication strategy, institutional reforms and outstanding contributions to information management at both the state and national levels.

Coverage of major state ceremonies, including Democracy Day, Independence Day, Children's Day and anniversary celebrations of the People First Administration, has ensured that important moments in the state's history are professionally documented and preserved.

Meanwhile, the continued publication of over 173 editions of the Nigerian Chronicle and Weekend Chronicle has sustained the state's print media presence and enriched the historical archive of government activities.

Another significant milestone has been the near-completion of the comprehensive restoration of the Cross River State Newspaper Corporation complex, which was extensively vandalised and destroyed during the #EndSARS protests in 2020.

The rehabilitation of the corporation's facilities represents the administration's commitment to rebuilding critical public institutions and restoring the state's capacity for public information dissemination through its flagship newspapers.

In furtherance of this objective, the Otu administration has also procured modern digital printing equipment for the restoration of the Government Printing Press. When fully operational, the facility will not only guarantee greater confidentiality in the printing of sensitive government documents, gazettes, white papers and other official publications, but will also position the state to generate additional revenue through commercial printing services for public and private organisations.

These complementary investments underscore Governor Otu's broader vision of rebuilding the entire government information value chain, from content creation and documentation to printing, publishing and distribution, while strengthening institutional self-reliance, improving operational efficiency and creating new economic opportunities within the information sector.

Ultimately, the achievements recorded in the information sector extend far beyond improved publicity.

They represent the deliberate construction of an open, digitally connected and citizen-focused governance system.

Through stronger communication channels, modern broadcasting infrastructure, revitalised institutional capacity, enhanced digital engagement, improved archival systems and broader media visibility, Governor Bassey Otu has repositioned information as a strategic instrument for development rather than merely a vehicle for publicity.

The reforms have strengthened transparency, increased citizen participation, expanded access to government information and restored confidence in public communication.

Three years after assuming office, Governor Bassey Edet Otu has transformed Cross River's information sector from a largely analogue, under-resourced system into a modern, technology-driven communication ecosystem.

From reviving dormant digital platforms and modernising government documentation to repositioning CRBC for global broadcasting and restoring Cross River's voice on the national media stage, the administration has demonstrated that effective governance depends as much on how government communicates as on what it delivers.

As the state advances toward deeper digital governance, broader citizen engagement and stronger institutional transparency, the reforms implemented between 2023 and 2026 have laid a durable foundation for an information sector that is not only more efficient and innovative but also better equipped to serve the people of Cross River State in the years ahead.
